

BEHAVIOUR

This fact sheet has been written by parent carers for parent carers.

What are behavioural problems?

If your child has a disability or additional needs that affect their behaviour, it can be extremely upsetting and stressful to deal with. This is especially true when you are out and about with your child. When unusual or socially unacceptable behaviour may lead to unwanted comments or judgements by other people. Often, this is down to ignorance. If a child does not 'look' disabled, people may assume that their behaviour is because they are 'naughty' or that you are a 'lax parent'. Even so, comments and 'tuts' can be hurtful and add to the stress of dealing with an already difficult situation.

What kinds of behaviour may be a cause for concern?

What's acceptable or unacceptable behaviour varies from person to person but, in general, the following behaviour may mean you and your child need some help:

- physically aggressive behaviour such as kicking, biting, hair-pulling or pinching
- verbally aggressive behaviour
- self-harm, such as head-banging, scratching and biting
- being withdrawn and unusually quiet
- vomiting
- obsessive behaviour
- repetitive behaviour such as rocking, repetitive speech or movements
- other issues such as smearing poo, damaging furniture or other objects

Causes of behavioural problems

Whatever the cause, if your child is having difficulty communicating their needs or something that's troubling them, it can surface as an unwanted behaviour instead. Sometimes it may be that your child is experiencing sensory overload (see our Sensory Issues fact sheet for more information). Understanding why it is happening and giving your child the right support can help to ensure their needs are met and also head off some issues before they result in unwanted behaviours. Changing how you respond to their behaviour may also help.

Ways to help behaviour

In the first instance, it could be useful to discuss your concerns with your child's health visitor, school nurse or school and seek their advice. You can then seek further information and support via the following channels:

- Therapy – there are a huge variety of therapies available. Which method you use can depend upon the cause of the behaviour – ask for advice.
- The Challenging Behaviour Foundation – works with families caring for children with severe learning disabilities. As well as information on their website, they can also have a family linking scheme so that parents can speak to others who have had similar issues.
- Scope – their website has some useful advice about challenging behaviour. See: www.scope.org.uk/support/families/diagnosis/behaviour.
- The National Autistic Society – if your child is on the autistic spectrum, you can find useful advice on behaviour at their website: www.autism.org.uk/about/behaviour.aspx.
